Aloha!

The faculty of the Department of Educational Foundations at the College of Education, University of Hawai‘i, invites you to pursue a MEd degree by joining the EdLeads program, Educational Leadership in the Asia-Pacific Region. Cohort VIII will begin in summer 2014.

The program is designed to allow teachers, administrators, and other educators to pursue study and research interests without career interruption. Sessions are concentrated in two summers, coupled with independent study with an advisor during the fall and spring semesters. The experience of scaffolding academic work along with career can create a powerful framework for reflecting on educational issues and provide opportunities to put theory into practice.

Face-to-face sessions will occur at the university campus, which boasts a tropical climate of sun and trade winds, a place for a wide diversity of students to meet and study together. In the past, students have gotten to know people from the various islands of Hawai‘i and from North America, Asia, and the Pacific Islands. The cohort experience affords you the opportunity to develop strong bonds with people you might not otherwise meet.

We invite you to join us to investigate educational issues from disciplinary and transdisciplinary perspectives, and pursue your own research interests with the support of our faculty and your cohort community.

If you are interested in knowing more about this opportunity, please read the details of the program on the EdLeads webpage and also the pages that provide information on our department, including the links we provide. Please do not hesitate to contact us with questions you might have.

My best regards,

Eileen H. Tamura
